1870. Eheu! fugaces labuntur anni!

It is well at this season, to pause awhile, in the routine of life's avocations, to stop for a moment from the dizzy fight of events in which our thoughts and habits become imperceptibly mixed, acquiring the rapidity and hurry of their evolution. Times change and we change with them, and change as rapidly as they do. The Christmas-tide and the close of the year suggest retrospection. The associations of the season carry each heart back in reverie to the long ago. In the bright yule-fire, we can recall, and see again the fancied castles, the forms, the faces, that we used to see so distinctly in the coals in childhood. Never mind what has happened since, we were happy then. Have those bright scenes, moulded in fancy among the fire-coals, become realities now in life? Does that beautiful countenance, seen then in boyhood, bend over you now in manhood. and love and cheer you.

Perhaps so, and 'tis sadder because real. Perhaps bright eyes are dim now. and only angels footsteps linger now, sent from a spirit land, at this season, wreathed with its associations and re trospections, and only spirit forms are reflected in the bright coals. How hallowed the review of the past! Such thoughts, are the moral value and beauty of the season. But to go back to those sunny times, how many events, how many changes have we to leap! In each individual life, how great the change! 1870. How old the world is getting! No wonder is it, that the rush of events is so dizzy, for rapidly with the gliding years, all things are hurrying to their Zenouement.

Over the world, ideas are evolving themseives out of experiment and speculation into the stubborn granite of fact.

War, with its perfect destruction, is hurrying the settlement of opposing interests and issues. The conservative past struggling with its entrenchments, strengthened by age, and the force of its own inertia, is giving way to the splendid triumphs of progress. King-craft in the old world, with its might and wealth, is compelled day by day to strip itself of its superstitions and attributes. The logic of events points unmistakably, surely, to the day when the seal of our Virginia, will be the emblem of the last grand triumph of the freedom, and equality of men, and religious and civil liberty, will have placed her foot upon the systems and institutions, that inculeate and enforce the dogmas of the "divine right of kings," and the unequal rights of man.

more stupendous events taken place, nor sublime reward which a sense of duty a mightier change been accomplished well-done always brings; in all these than in our own Southern country .- things and in your material advancement events, and realizing the swift gliding of New Year! the years, can we be astonished at the rush and the change?

Slavery, and a landed aristocracy alteady existed at the South, established as we thought not-to-be-removed, and already, bulwarked with tradition, and superstition. These are the bases upon which monarchies are super-structed, and upen which they rest. These elements, antagonistic to freedom, existed at the South, and their natural consequences already were seen. Wealth, education, refinement, purity of social relations, virtne, and even a sense of manhood, were confined to a certain class. They owned the slaves and the land. Outside of this class, there was another. In this other class, there was squalid degradation, ignorance, want, and a debased sense of inferiority. In numbers, in degradation, in the distance between them and the wealthy class, there was a constant and rapid increase. They were in the majority in numbers; in every other respect they were immeasurably inferior.

Any county in South Carolina, will exhibit this to be the state of things existing before the war. The proof is around us, the state of affairs, startling.

Blow after blow had been hurled by the North, at the institution of slavery, the corner-stone of our social fabric .-An evil in itself, and the contagious disorder, fatal to liberty its propagation and increase was stopped by England's appeal to a higher law than the intercourse of nations, and declaring against the slave trade. Its entire abolition was insisted upon by our "Northern friends," whether from a true philanthropy or no, it matters not, The South went into the conflict. Its terrific tragedy and its result we have realized.

The work of reconstruction of our Legislature. civilization was commenced. How were the three classes the slave-owners, the for a Christmas frolic. They were comparatively neutral

They are the class most benefitted by the result. They were emancipated from vassalage and inferior condition, as degrading as slavery.

But what in the gliding years, will be the ultimate result of these things? The desperate case required a desperate remedy. In order to overthrow this fabric of our civilization, slavery was abolished. In order to rebuild and rear again a new civilization in accordance with the advanced conceptions of freedom, the foundation must be the broad one of universal equality and rights. This being the basis, society, tastes, intellect, merit, will divide their own classes and relations; liberty is guaranteed to all. To-day, we suffer under the degradation and inconvience of the colored majority, guided and governed by a powerful political party at the North, which at their headquarters in the North, frames our laws, and incited and governs the colored people, by their agents and leagues at the South.

Where then, lies ous hope? In the edifice of government, which is being enacted upon this broad foundation of reedom, how are we to have a place? Already are our leaders realizing the ituation and the remedy. Admit the result of these things and lo our part in the reconstruction.

By aiding the colored man, the most cractable creature in existence, in his efforts to be educated, and to become an honest and useful citizen; by forbearance with his errors and his ignorance; by the discharge of our Christian duty to his sace, we can secure the aid of his numbers and his valued labor, drive away the tools of a foreign party and restore our country to her sons and to prosperity.

At the threshold of a new year, it is well to take this practical resume of our affairs, and to adopt sensible and wise resolutions for our conduct.

May the new year be made a happy me to our State, by restoring her to the curtody of her sons!

OBITUARY.

Tribute of Affection in Memory of Miss Lou Jennings.

Pale, frozen flower, the grave has won her. Thy silvery laugh no more I'll hear; but in the silent hours of night, when pale stars watch and weep over thy death-couch, in dreams I'll see thee, dearest, and soar with thy lovely spirit through the glorious vista that leads to Heaven. And I'll see bright angels as they open wide the portals and welcome thee to the "City of thy Ged." Mystic calm of dreams dwell with me forsweetest roses of home, encircling my heart, and drawing me heavenward.

> "She died in beauty like a rese Blown from its parent stem; She died in beauty like a star Dropped from some diadem."

Never did stern Atropos sever a brighter thread-no dark line of sin was ever tangled there. And methinks she paused and wept ere she executed the dread command. Three years ago, and three bleeming laughters gladdened the home new wrapped in funeral shade. Oh, the fathomless grief of he parents. No word, no tear of mine can soothe their sacred grief. Ch! none can know, bereaved parents, sorrowing friends; may the silvery veil of comfort descend on your hearts, and may the memory of LOU'S beautiful life be your guiding star to Heaven.
